Graves Point Fishing Club, Near Newport

The lodge was first owned by Seth Barton French, who built it and used it with several other gentleman as a sort of fishing club. It was built about twenty-five years ago and since its construction the rugged, picturesque country roundabout has become dotted with fine houses. Not far away on a com-manding site is the villa of Commodore Arthur Curtiss James of the New York acht Club. Much nearer are the Rawon and Theodore M. Davis places. Each season during the cruise of the

New York yacht squadron Mr. Morgan was accustomed to spend some time in Newport, and generally he had a try at the bass. Members of his family were also fond of going out to this breezy spot where the surf continually urls in over the rocks.

On the eastern side of this property n a grassy plot are several ancient graves, two of them being marked with crumbling stones-the last resting place of some of the earliest settlers of this

Traders Travelled Over West and Northwest Buying From Indians.

St. Louis, Jan. 8.—Two hundred buyers from Europe and the United States attended the Government auction of Alaskan seal furs here. The total number of skins offered was 1,823. The top price for blue fox skins was $158 each.

Sealskins were sold to buyers from Leip-zic, Brussels, Paris, St. Paul and New York. zic, Brussels, Paris, St. Paul and New York. The total amount paid for seal and fox skins was estimated at $75,000 to $80,000. Of this amount about $60,000 was for sealskins. L. Lester Jones of Washington, acting United States Fish Commissioner, said the prices were 5 to 10 per cent. higher than those realized at London last year.

The Government auction reminded old timers of the period when the fur trade was a large factor in the business interests of the city. It also was a reminder of the fact that the growth of St. Louis has been

fact that the growth of St. Louis has been in a measure due to the fur trade.

Old time St. Louisans remember the last days of the American Fur Company, a concern founded and conducted chiefly by the Chouteau family, which prospered for many years and went out of business with the decline of the fur industry before the civil Indiana Chief Producers.

The business at that time was dependent upon the western and northwestern frontier for supplies, which were brought to St. Louis chiefly by steamboats on the Missouri River fors alone. The American Fur Company had two boats of its own, the Spread Eagle and the Robert Campbell which was named in honor of a fur merchant of that day but was built by Capt. Ben Johnson, who made big profit on the sale of the steamer.

Numerous other boats and hundreds of fur buyers were engaged in the business at that time, and Indians were the chief pro-ducers. Stories told by old St. Louisans indicate the business was a "skin game" for became their victims.

Buyers usually traded trinkets and other goods of little value for the furs and re ceived the highest market prices for them either here or in Eastern markets.
